KDHE Highlights Employees During Public Service Recognition Week

State employees' important functions a focus during campaign, through May 12

TOPEKA – Kansas Department of Health and Environment (KDHE) Secretary Jeff Andersen is pleased to announce the agency's participation in the national Public Service Recognition Week campaign. This week, KDHE employees and their important work will be highlighted on KDHE social media pages. The agency will focus on staff who serve in a variety of roles to benefit the well-being of Kansans.

"KDHE fulfills some of the most critical functions in State government," said Secretary Andersen. "Our staff members come to work each day to ensure residents of our state have clean air, water and food. They also promote the health and vitality of Kansans of all ages and in all corners of the state. We appreciate all they do in their ongoing commitment to serve the public."

The first employee to be highlighted this week is Stacie Creech, who has served the State of Kansas for 14 years, and currently serves in the Office of Personnel Services for KDHE, in Topeka.

"I have been part of helping someone who just graduated from high school to their first adult job, to executives and all kinds of different people in different positions," said Creech. "Taking a position when it's approved by the Governor, to meeting the employees who fill the job, it is enjoyable to take the full circle."

President Donald Trump has designated this week as Public Service Recognition Week, to include members of federal, State and local workforces. Learn more about Public Service Recognition Week.
